

College of Alameda

Compendium of Committees

2015-2016

The Mission of College of Alameda to serve the educational needs of its diverse community by providing comprehensive and flexible programs and resources that empower students to achieve their goals.

Structures for Participation

Participatory Governance Committee (Councils)

Committee or Council made up of constituent representatives designated or selected to act in an advisory capacity that meets on a regular basis regarding an institutional topic or area of responsibility. The charge of College of Alameda participatory governance committees or councils is to communicate ideas, concerns, and recommendations through dialogue and discussion between policy groups.

Participatory Governance Committees report directly to the highest participatory governance body: College Council. Constituent voices are heard on topics for decision making and planning. Participatory Governance Committees serve as governance models that communicate with each other regarding integrated decision making and planning.

Standing Committees (Operational)

Standing Committees are not required to have cross constituent representation, although appropriate representation for the committee charge is highly suggested. A standing committee or council considers matters pertaining to procedural issues and/or systems issues defined by the role of the members.

Standing committees complete ongoing work for operational units. Standing committees have a clear charge and a constituency report or responsibility but do not mandate formal representation or institutional reporting unless requested.

Ad Hoc Committees

Ad Hoc Committees are a working group or sub-group created by a standing committee or council to address and make recommendations on a particular subject. Members may be from a council or committee or may be selected outside of that process.

Task Force

A task force is a constituency represented group specifically convened by and reporting to any participatory governance committee or constituency to address a special college-wide subject or issue and meets until the subject/issue is resolved or completed

The Mission of College of Alameda to serve the educational needs of its diverse community by providing comprehensive and flexible programs and resources that empower students to achieve their goals.

Constituent Responsibilities

Faculty Participatory Governance

The Academic Senate is responsible for formal recommendations regarding academic and professional matters (See: California Administrative Code Title 5 Section 53201). The Academic Senate consists of both fulltime and associate faculty representation. Academic Senate meetings are open and all faculty are encouraged to communicate regularly with their representatives and to participate in Senate sponsored events, activities, and meetings. The Senate is also responsible for appointing faculty to college and district participatory governance committees, peer review teams, and various college and district ad hoc committees.

The Senate President meets regularly with the College President and other campus leadership through the President's Cabinet and also meets with the Vice President of Instruction to ensure college-wide faculty concerns are communicated and discussed.

Classified Participatory Governance

The College of Alameda Classified Senate represents the concerns and interests of the Classified Staff in participatory governance, collects, evaluates, and disseminates information for the classified staff, and promotes staff professionalism and development. The Senate is responsible for representing all classified in the participatory governance processes of the college and district (See: Education Code Section 70901.2, California Administrative Code Title 5 Section 51023.5).

The Senate is responsible for appointing classified representatives to college and district participatory governance committees. In addition, the Senate President meets regularly with the College President and other campus leadership at the President's Cabinet to ensure college-wide classified concerns are communicated and discussed.

Student Participatory Governance

ASCOA annually elects the Student Senators. These student leaders represent student issues and voice opinions, participate in decision-making process, and discuss school activities and projects. The Associated Student Government is responsible for appointing students to college and district participatory governance committees. The ASCOA also meets regularly with the College President at the President's Cabinet to discuss student issues or concerns. Students have a responsibility to gather information from these meetings and to disseminate this information.

mation and collect feedback from their student peers.

Administrator Participatory Governance

The administration at College of Alameda meets as a staff as part of the President's Management Team. Not a governance committee, this group appoints administrative representation to college and participatory governance committees as part of the job duties included in each administrative position.

Representative Constituency Roles and Expectations

It is expected that representation of participatory bodies on any committee serves as the voice and vote for that constituency. Each representative is responsible for notifying its constituency of committee information and decisions. The highest level participatory governance committee at College of Alameda is College Council. In order to ensure timely participatory governance process and systems, it is incumbent upon each College Council representative to be prepared to discuss and vote. Representational communication can be completed through face to face meetings, technology or other means but cannot impede the progress of college business by delaying participation beyond deadlines.
